

fresher fields on the frontier. These circumstances brought to Kentucky a set of men who were well calculated 'to turn the world upside down.' Their lax system of morals, crude logic, and vigorous declamation met with great acceptance in a society where spirited action was much better understood than moral philosophy; and where religion meant 'belonging' to some church, the earnest opposition to peculiar tenets of other sects, and abstaining from certain violations of the law-and-order sentiment of the community."

Camp meetings were among the most attractive community affairs in many sections of the Kentucky territory. People came from miles around to see the most popular preachers on the frontier. A complete community was organized at the camp meeting with the "tabernacle" as the center. Here attendants, usually from many different denominations, combined gossiping, horse trading, courting, and frolicking with shouting and "getting religion." Every year, each denomination held a series of these camp meetings, usually on successive days and nights.

These early camp meetings, where there were sometimes more than 20,000 people in attendance, revealed an outpouring of the spirit which was unlike anything the frontier had ever seen.

People came prepared with enough provisions to last several days and on some occasions, even weeks. When not at the meetings, they found shelter in their wagons or in rudely constructed cabins in the woods. The earliest of these religious gatherings occurred in Logan County, at the time of the great revival which originated under the preaching of the Rev. James McGready, beginning in 1799.

A remarkable characteristic of these early camp meetings was the wild bodily movement associated with the ceremonies. Men, women, and children alike succumbed to the "jerks" or rather the "exercises" as they were popularly termed.

An eyewitness quoted in Perrin's History of Kentucky describes these scenes: "Many times I have seen them unexpectedly jerked flat on their backs, and the next instant jerked full length on their faces. Ladies, while sitting intently observant of the exercises, were jerked so violently that their bonnets, capes, handkerchiefs, and loose apparel would be thrown clear away, and their long, beautiful hair unrestrained by combs, fillets, etc., flowing down to their waists would crack like an ox-whip with the violent vibrations of their heads and shoulders. Others would jump and run, like an antelope, perhaps for 50 or 100 yards, and then fall prone upon the ground and lie apparently lifeless, sometimes for hours. Some would say it was the chastening work of an Almighty God, others that it was the work of the devil."

A large part of the explanation of these manifestations may be found in the superstitions of the early settlers. Respect for signs and omens made them easily moved by false interpretations of natural phenomena.

To many, a bad storm meant the end of the world was close at hand. The moon's phases were just about the most important natural phenomena to these early settlers; babies were weaned, grains and vegetables planted, and hogs slaughtered with strict adherence to the

Seth M. HAYS

1839-1844 Seth M. HAYS was living in Westport, now part of Kansas City, Missouri.

City, Missouri.

1844-1845 HAYS, about thirty-three years old, followed the Kansas River west into present-day Kansas.

April 1845 Charles B. Chouteau and Seth M. HAYS were in charge of Frederick Chouteau's trading post (located on what is now Mission Creek in the westernmost part of Shawnee County, west of Topeka, about two miles from the Kansa Indian Mission that Methodist missionaries had founded in 1835).

In the spring of 1846 the Kansa signed a treaty with the government, ceding their land along the Kansas River in exchange for a new but smaller reservation located along the upper valley of the Neosho River, in what is now Morris County, Kansas. Seth HAYS, perhaps sensing that Chouteau's trading post would soon close its doors, returned to Westport.

April 1847 At Council Grove on the Santa Fe Trail, Albert G. BOONE (grandson of Daniel BOONE and cousin of Seth HAYS) and James G. HAMILTON, of Westport, Missouri, (by virtue of their Kansa Indian trading license) established a trading post on the Kaw reservation. Boone and Hamilton placed bachelor Seth M. HAYS in charge. Seth M. HAYS, a citizen of Westport, Missouri, having obtained a license from the Government to trade with the Indians in "Kansas."

April 1847 Seth M. HAYS was the first permanent white settler in Council Grove. When he arrived in 1847, he brought with him a Mexican teamster, who also was a handyman and interpreter, and a black slave (Aunt Sallie). Seth M. HAYS built a log cabin (trading post) near the west bank of the Neosho River near where the Commercial House later stood. He lived there with his adopted daughter and freed slave (Aunt Sallie, his housekeeper).

Mid-May 1853 At Council Grove, there is a large, well-furnished store (run by Seth M. HAYS), where a constant supply of everything required for the road is kept.

Soon after Kansas Territory was organized in 1854, the government ordered a census of the territory. When census taker James R. McClure arrived in Council Grove the following year, he reported that there were thirty-nine people living there aside from the Indians. He also noted that Seth HAYS operated a well-furnished store and "kept for sale all kinds of goods needed by the constant stream of teamsters" who passed through the settlement following the Santa Fe Trail.

1857 The HAYS House, said to be the oldest continuously operating restaurant west of the Mississippi River, was founded by Seth M. HAYS.

The Council Grove Town Company was organized in 1857, with Seth HAYS, Thomas Huffaker, the Chouteau brothers, and a few other residents as stockholders; and in 1858 the territorial legislature approved the incorporation of the town.

February 2, 1858 Hezekiah Brake, Mr A., Louis Boyse reached Council Grove that night, and began our arrangements for the trip to New Mexico. Seth M. HAYS kept a store and an outfitting station at Council Grove at this time. He had in keeping now six small Mexican mules, a good pony, a large wagon, and various other necessary acquisitions to our outfit. It took us four days to get the animals ready and lay in a supply of everything needful for our journey. An freed slave who worked for Mr. HAYS roasted coffee, made cakes, and gave us a keg of pickles and sauerkraut as relishes.

October 1858 The first term of the court was held, and the place of holding it was in the old log cabin built by Seth M. HAYS. The court officers were: William Weir, of Wyandotte County, was prosecuting attorney; L. McCarthy, clerk, and W. B. Harrold acted as Sheriff. The place where the jury deliberated upon their verdict was under the shade of a tree that stood in the yard.

1867 The Seth M. HAYS home was built of bricks from a local factory and native lumber.

1868 The Missouri, Kansas, and Texas (Katy) Railroad, built through Morris County in 1868, passed through and brought citizens to Council Grove. Wagon freighting over the Santa Fe Trail began to decline. Seth HAYS sold out and started a saloon called the Brown Jug. To attract attention in the growing community, HAYS hired a man with a bagpipe to entertain customers. His business prospered, and when members of a church were without a meeting hall, HAYS let them use his saloon. When the church held services, he would remove all evidence of his business and would cover some of the walls and the bar with wagon canvas. The Brown Jug was the first school in Council Grove.

1872 HAYS's housekeeper, Aunt Sallie, died. Her funeral was held in HAYS's home.

Bryant Van Buren Boone died of small pox in Mississippi during the Civil War.

Daniel R. Boone died while the family was en route from Tennessee to Kentucky.

"Andrew Richmond Boone, a lawyer, was elected county judge in 1854 and re-elected in 1858 without opposition, but resigned in 1861, and the same year was elected to the State legislature. This was the stormy period, at the commencement of the Civil War, and after serving in the assembly one month, being threatened with arrest on account of his southern views and sympathy, Judge Boone resigned his seat and returned home. He was a candidate in 1865 for commonwealth's attorney, but was prevented from making the canvass through the interference of the military authorities. He was elected circuit judge of the judicial district, composed of the counties of Hickman, Fulton, Ballard, Graves, Calloway, Marshall, and McCracken, an office whose duties he honorably discharged for six years. In 1874 he was elected to Congress on the Democratic ticket, was re-elected in 1876 and declined a nomination in 1878. In 1881 Judge Boone was elected a delegate from the Memphis Conference (Methodist) to the Ecumenical Council at London, England." Miss Mary Emma O'Bryan sang 'Ave Maria,' and 'O, Queen Immaculate.'

"Miss Marian Schneider was bridesmaid, and Kelly Thompson of Louisville, cousin of the bride, served as best man.

Boone

The knowledge of the Boone family can be traced as far back as to John Boone (son of George and Mary Boone) written by James Boone (son of James Boone, Sr., and Mary, his wife, and grandson of the said George and Mary Boone) in the year 1787:

George Boone I (the first heard of) was born in old England. George Boone II (son of George Boone the first) was born in or near the city of Exeter, being a blacksmith. His wife's maiden name was Sarah Uppey. He died at the age of 60, and she died at the age of 80, said to never have a aching bone or decayed tooth.

George Boone III (son of George and Sarah Boone) was born at Stow (a village near the city of Exeter), 1666, being a weaver. His wife's maiden name was Mary Maudgridge, who was born at Bradswick (a town eight miles from the city of Exeter), in 1666. The said Mary Maudgridge was daughter of John Maudgridge and Mary, his wife, had nine children that lived to be men and women, named George, Sarah, Squire, Mary, John, Joseph, Benjamin, James, and Samuel; having each of them several children, excepting John, who never married. The said George and Ma

Boone, with their family, came from the town of Bradwinch, in Devonshire, old England. They arrived at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1717, on September 29th, of the old style of calendar, or October 10th, according to the new style. Three of the children, to-wit: George, Sarah, and Squire, they sent in a few years before from Abington, and stayed a few months there; thence to North Wales, and lived about two years there; thence to Oley, in the same county of Philadelphia, where Sarah (being married) had moved to sometime before. This last place of their residence (since the division made in the township of Oley and county of Philadelphia) is called the township of Exeter, in Berks County. It was called Exeter because they came from a place near the city of Exeter. George Boone III died on July 27, 1714, about 8:00, aged 78 years, and Mary, his wife, died February 2, 1740-1741, aged 72 years, and they were decently interred in the Friend's Burying Ground, in the said township of Exeter. When he died, he left eight children, 52 grandchildren, and 10 great-grandchildren.

George Boone IV (eldest son of George and Mary Boone) was born in Bradwinch, in the year 1701, and died in Exeter Township, aged about 63 years. He taught school for several years near Philadelphia, was a good mathematician, and taught the several branches of English learning; was a magistrate for several years. His wife's maiden name was Deborah Howell.

George Boone V (eldest son of George and Deborah Boone) was never married, and died in Exeter Township aged about 24 years.

James Boone, Sr. (the sixth son of George and Mary Boone) was born in Bradwinch on July 7, 1709, and was married May 3, 1735, when he was 26 years old, to Mary Foulke (the eldest daughter of Hugh and Anne Foulke), by whom he had 14 children, nine of whom lived to be grown up, namely: Annie, Marj, Martha, James, John, Judah, Joshua, Rachel, and Moses. His first wife, Mary, died on February 20, 1756, at 1:20 p.m., age 41.

John Boone, Sr., (son of George and Mary Boone) was born in the town of Bradwinch, in Devonshire, old England, on January 14, 1703, and he departed this life on October 11, 1785, at 84 years of age (being the oldest of the known Boone family at the time of this genealogy, and the last of all those in our relations who came from England.) He was decently interred in the Friends' Burying Ground, at Exeter, the day after he died. He left England at the age of 16, and it is remarkable that he lived exactly 68 years here in North America from the day he landed at Philadelphia, and he lived only five weeks and four days after the death of his brother, James.

This genealogy, it will be observed, does not mention the subsequent history of Squire Boone, Sr. (son of George III and Mary Boone). How many children he had is not known, but Daniel, Squire, Edward, George, Hannah, and perhaps two other sisters, Mrs. Grant and Mrs. William Bryan, were residents of Kentucky for a time.

Daniel was born on February 11, 1731, and Squire about 1737, both in Berks County, Pennsylvania. It is not probable that Daniel was the eldest of the family of children, though the eldest of the brothers named. The children seem to have been left orphans about 1745, when they were taken by friends first to Winchester, Virginia, and thence to Holman's Ford, on the South Yadkin, in North Carolina. Here, Daniel met Rebecca Bryan and his fate in a rather romantic way, if the current story of the event may be credited.

When a young man, Boone was out one night with some companions on a "fire hunt." While proceeding through a heavily timbered piece of bottom land, which bordered a small stream, that formed the boundary of Morgan Bryan's plantation, two brilliant sparks in the gloom gave indication that the fire had "shined the eyes" of a deer. Boone, who carried his rifle, ready to shoot the game which the light should hold with its fascinating glare, gave the concerted signal to the torchbearer who preceded him, dismounted from his horse, and having secured him to a tree, crept cautiously forward. Finding a convenient covert in a clump of hazel and plum bushes, he peered about to discover the exact location of the surprised animal. Again, the eyes turned with a steady gaze toward the treacherous light, and Boone raised his rifle to fire, when some mysterious impulse caused him to hesitate. At that instant, the game, startled by some sound or motion which broke the fatal charm, sprang through the underbrush with a rustle and bound, the ardent young hunter following in rapid pursuit.

The chase led toward the cabin, and thinking he had fallen upon a pet animal of the family, he continued his course to the house, impeded in his progress by hunting-traps and dogs which beset him on his nearest approach. Reaching the door, he was admitted and welcomed, but before the young hunter regained his breath sufficiently enough to tell his story, a boy of ten years, accompanied by a breathless girl of sixteen, "with ruddy cheeks, flaxen hair, and soft blue eyes," rushed into the room. "Oh father, father," cried the boy, "Sis was down to the creek to set my lines, and was chased by a panther or something. She's too scared to tell."

It is not probable that this was the first meeting of the young man and maiden, but however that may be, it is said that the circumstances attending this event evoked an interest in each other which eventually brought the principal actors together in marriage.
