Thomas A. Moore, 69, Dies At New Market

Thomas Alfred Moore, 69, well known resident of the New Market section, died at his home there shortly after midnight Sunday morning following a lingering illness of complications.

A life-long resident of the county, Mr. Moore was born on May 19, 1878, a son of William and Frances Bright Moore, now deceased, long residents of the New Market community. For eighteen years he was employed by the State Highway Department before ill health forced his retirement.

He was twice married and is survived by his widow, the former Mrs. Nannie Farmer. Four daughters born to the first union also survive. They are Mrs. Bertha Yates of Jessetown, Mrs. Regina Rakes of Magnolia, Mrs. Edna Brown of Louisville and Mrs. Medley Perkins of Cincinnati, Ohio. He leaves two brothers, George Washington Moore of New Market and Alex Moore of Mt. Washington, and several grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

The remains were brought to the Bosley Funeral Home and later returned to the residence. Funeral services were conducted Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Muldraugh's Hill Baptist Church by the Rev. W. C. Hundley, assisted by the Rev. Lewis Marler. Burial was in the New Market Cemetery. Pallbearers were F. E. Westerfield, William Payne, Thomas Luckett, R. L. Farris, George Sapp and G. M. Huston.

This is the last year that the tax list is still kept in Green Co.
The other years are at Frankfort. There are lists for the years 1815 to 1818.

It seems to me that these younger men were sons of Thomas Moore Sr and that he must have left the county as I was unable to find any record of his will or administration. This theory seems the most logical one. The Schuyler Moore who attended the sale of Robt.
moore was a son of a Tandy Moore who came from Bedford Co. Va and had sons Thomas, Wm. and Alex and Samuel. He was not old enough to have been Travis' father. Many of the people who lived near Travis Moore came from Charlotte Co. Va. though they may have stopped on the way somewhere. I read many other Moore records and sorted them out as to families and localities but could find no certain record of the parents of Travis.

Dear Ms. Himes,

On May 1, my cousin Mike Blake and I were researching the Riney family in your library and you expressed interest in some of our material. I am enclosing some photos of James William Riney and his children as well as records from the war department. These are pay records and records of his capture and internment, eventually in Andersonville prison. I hope other researchers will find these of use. I also included a copy of the Macoupin county Illinois marriage register for October 1, 1871 showing his marriage to Margaret Jane Durbin.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF THE HONORABLE ISIDORE MOORE

by
Timothy J. O'Rourke

Kansas City, Missouri

October 31, 1966

ISIDORE MOORE

Perhaps one reason why the modern American male may at times feel frustrated is that, unlike the man of a century ago or less, he cannot head in a westwardly direction and brave the perils of nature to become a pioneer. Has the contemporary individual ever stopped to reflect upon the character of the early American pioneer? Let us consider the life of one such pioneer, Isidore Moore.

On November 15, 1771, in the reign of George III, Isidore Moore was born in Saint Mary's county, Maryland, probably near Newtown, the son of Nicholas Moore, Jr., who was born in 1748, and Monica Drury, who was born in February 1751. His paternal grandparents, Nicholas Moore, Sr., born about 1712, and Diana Fennell, as well as his maternal grandparents, John Drury and Sarah (or possibly, Susanah) Hayden, were all residents of Saint Mary's county. The diary of Father Walton, S.J., pastor of the Roman Catholic congregation at Newtown, Maryland, in the 1760's, lists these persons as members of his parish, the Moores under the spelling of More.

There is a persistent family tradition, related to me by several persons, that this family of Moores is descended from St. Thomas More, Knight, Lord Chancellor of England in the reign of Henry VIII, and Roman Catholic martyr. He is also the patron of Rockhurst College, Kansas City, Missouri, a Jesuit institution. I am inclined to give credence to this story for several reasons. The Moore family settled in Saint Mary's county under the Lords Baltimore, proprietors of the palatinate of Maryland.

The spiritual adviser of George Calvert, first Lord Baltimore, was the Rev. Henry More, S.J., English provincial of the Society of Jesus, and a great-grandson of the Saint. It would not, therefore, seem too surprising if some of the family came to America. However, the files of the Jesuits in Maryland and in England contain no mention of any members of the family having come to the New World. On the other hand, an extended pedigree of the Visitation of Yorkshire, recording the lineage of bearers of coats of arms, mentions that some of the male Mores of the same generation as Father Henry More, emigrated from England to America. From general consensus, the family tradition of descent from Thomas More was in circulation prior to his canonization.

It is interesting to note that the names Henry and Thomas have been common among the Moore clan in America. Both Thomas More and Isidore Moore had sons named John, while Thomas had a grandson named Austin More, and Isidore a son named Austin Moore.

The Roman Catholic families which came to Maryland in the middle 1600's were for the most part of the middle and the upper classes, for only they could afford to practice their religion in England for as long as they did. It would seem reasonable, therefore, that these persons were aware of their past background. One interesting fact is that while the majority of Moores have always told me their ancestors came to this country from England, and all available information bears this out, there is another strong tradition that the family is of Irish descent. At the time of the birth of Thomas More, his father wrote that his ancestors had moved to England from Ireland.

The orthographic difference between Moore and More may be dismissed, for the name was spelled both ways on different occasions by both families. It must also be borne in mind that spelling had not become stabilized in those days.

Isidore Moore, however, was a gentleman of sterling character, no matter who his ancestors were.

Beginning about 1785 there was a considerable migration of Catholics, who for the most part were related to one another, from Saint Mary's county to central Kentucky. It is believed that they traveled down the Ohio River by some kind of boat to Maysville, Kentucky, or they may have come through the Cumberland Gap. British depredations during the American revolution had ruined many of the planters, whose principal crop was tobacco, their sons had been killed in battle, their unworked fields had grown up, their slaves and stock were gone, and their homes and farm buildings had been destroyed. For these reasons, some members of the Moore family left their beloved Maryland. By 1792, Nicholas Moore, Jr., who is known to have been a small slave-holder, was to be found in the tax lists of Nelson county, Kentucky, the cradle of Catholicism on the old frontier. His elder brother James, who had married Ann Dorsey in 1776, later joined him in Kentucky.

Isidore Moore first appears in the Kentucky records when he and Eleanor Cooper, who was twenty-five or twenty-six years of age, and who seems to have been a Protestant widow, received a marriage bond in Nelson county, March 22, 1794. The surety, Daniel Ferry, wrote that Eleanor's father, who lived on Brashear's Creek in Shelby county, Kentucky, was agreeable to the marriage, which was duly witnessed by Thomas Ward, and was most likely solemnized by the Rev. Stephen Theodore Badin, pioneer priest of Kentucky, and the first priest ordained in the United States. It is of interest to note that Isidore named his thirteenth child Stephen Theodore. From the union of Isidore

Moore and Eleanor Cooper there were three sons: James C., John, and Martin Isaac. His first wife apparently died early in 1799.

On November 11, 1799, Isidore Moore took a marriage bond with Leah McDaniel, who was born about 1782, the daughter of John and Mary McDaniel, natives of Frederick county, Maryland, who seem to have been of the Catholic faith. Caleb Howell served as surety for the second marriage, the witnesses being Eli Adams, brother-in-law of Leah, and Richard Moore, who was a first cousin of Isidore.

Isidore Moore is found next in the 1800 federal census of Washington county, Kentucky, where he apparently moved quite soon after his marriage. After this he is no longer to be found in Kentucky records, for according to his will, in the fall of 1800 he migrated to that part of the District of Sainte Genevieve which is now Perry county, Missouri, about eighty miles south of Saint Louis. His father, Nicholas Moore, Jr., was in Kentucky as late as May 7, 1801, when he served as an appraiser of the estate of a William Moore in Nelson county.

Why did the family move to Missouri? In his will, Isidore stated that he had been poor in Kentucky, that his second marriage had been opposed by friends on both sides, and that he was determined to live under the frowns of no one. And so, in the hope of bettering his lot, he moved for New Spain, which during his lifetime was also called New France, Upper Louisiana, and Missouri. Born a British subject, Isidore Moore became an American with the Revolution, and by his move to Missouri, he came under the jurisdiction of the Spanish and the French governments. Eventually, with the Louisiana Purchase, he once again became an American, and died a citizen of the United States. Interestingly enough, some of his descendants later intermarried with those of Louis de Hault de Lassus de Luziere, the last royal governor of Upper Louisiana.

Isidore Moore was the recipient of a Spanish land grant of 510.42 acres and he began the development of this land, which lay along the Cinque Hommes Creek. His family was the eighth American and the first Catholic family in the area. It would not be stretching the truth to say that the Moores were probably one of the first American Catholic families in the entire State of Missouri. His friend, Joseph Tucker, who journeyed back to Bardstown, Kentucky in later years to bring Bishop Rosati to Missouri, settled near him in 1802. Joseph Tucker's wife Francis Drury, was either a sister or a cousin to Isidore's mother.

With the transfer of power from Spain to France and then, to the United States, Isidore Moore's condition improved. The new governor was quick to recognize his abilities, and appointed him a captain of the militia of the District of Sainte Genevieve, Territory of Upper Louisiana, in 1806.

Our ancestor was respected by all who knew him, and led the community in both its political and its social life. He was a friend of the Shawnee and the Delaware Indians, who often appealed to him to settle disputes among themselves. The Indian tribes had a camping ground and a burial site on his land, which was situated about six miles southeast of the present site of Perryville, Missouri.

Isidore Moore's first political experience was his appointment to the bench in 1806 as judge of the Sainte Genevieve District. On April 1, 1813, he was appointed to a short term as common pleas judge of the District. He served in the first State legislature at Saint Charles, representing Sainte Genevieve, at the second session of the General Assembly in January 1815, and later at the fourth General Assembly in January 1818. A unique honor which befell him was serving as President Pro-tem of the Missouri

State Senate in 1821. He served a total of sixteen years in the Missouri legislature, two or three terms being in the House of Representatives, and the remainder of them in the Senate. One of the Moore descendants in Saint Louis possesses a number of receipts from the early 1820's, which Isidore Moore signed for his pay.

Early editions of newspapers of Jackson, Missouri, from 1819 to 1823, tell us among other things that Isidore Moore captured a stray mare appraised at sixty dollars, near Apple Creek, and that he was the administrator of the estate of his son Felix Moore, and of Lucy Moore, widow of his first cousin, James Moore, Jr.

From an original letter in the archives of the Archdiocese of Saint Louis, we have Isidore Moore's testimony concerning the growth of the Catholic Church in Perry county, Missouri. "The old church was built in 1812. The Rev. James Maxwell, Vicar General, blessed it, and said the first Mass in it. He served us the year 1813, but how often I cannot recollect (sic). That reverend gentleman had some years previously said Mass a few times in the dwellinghouse of old Mr. (Joseph) Tucker. Perhaps it was in the years 1806 or 1807."

Isidore and Leah Moore were the parents of sixteen children. In addition to his other children, their household contained twenty-one persons, not counting slaves and other relatives, such as Isidore's parents, who may have resided there.

Judge Moore, as he was often called, (his last judicial term, as a judge of the county court, was from 1831-1832), had some insightful comments about children in his will: "My three first children, that are living, James C., John, and Martin Isaac, having contributed very little by their exertions, toward this acquisition of the property I now possess, and each of them having received land of me, which they have parted with; and some personal property at the time of their respective marriages, they certainly have no right to expect much now, except as I may herein after direct."

And again: "My children are numerous; some have rendered more service than others; some have been more expensive and occasioned more trouble of body and mind than others." The latter part of this statement may refer to some family gossip which has come down over the years, which says that his son Samuel Louis Moore fathered a child by his Negro slave Lucindy. The offspring was known as "nigger John Moore", as distinguished from a half-brother, John Ruben Moore, who moved to Kansas. Nigger John was the only one of his race ever allowed to live within Perryville, Missouri. He died a number of years ago, never having married.

The will of Isidore Moore, herein cited, is a very interesting document of ten pages in longhand. He was meticulous in the disposal of his six slaves; they were to be sold only to Catholics! If his wife's slaves were to die, his daughters' slaves were to serve Mrs. Moore, who was also entitled to the lower room in the east end of the house, and to the support of her part of the plantation. The whole settlement was to be kept out of the county court. Perhaps he was mindful of the way in which the estate of his cousin, Richard Moore, had been dissipated by legal haggling.

It is not known just what crops were grown on the family plantation, but it is certain that one of them was flax. From the crop of 1837, were made the wedding pants of his son Stephen. They have passed from eldest son to eldest son since that time and are now in the possession of Lloyd Moore of Florissant, Missouri.

If the story of "nigger John" is true, we need not be ashamed of our ancestor, for it in no way bears upon his character. This episode may account for his comment that he detested the effects of slavery and that it was dangerous for eternity. No doubt in his will he desired to give a final reprimand to some of his children.

This remarkable man died in 1842, and was buried in the cemetery adjoining the Seminary of Saint Mary of the Barrens, at Perryville, May 7, 1842. His descendants, numbering several thousand, are scattered throughout the world. It is evident that heredity has transmitted to many of them the characteristics of this fine man, for many have attained prominence in many fields, most notably the religious, where one became president of the University of San Francisco and the first American Jesuit to go to China; another was the first American Divine Word Brother to go to India; and another is presently Vicar General of the Diocese of Davenport, Iowa.

And so we now take leave of Isidore Moore, as we, his descendants, continue on.
